Amnesia for incoming words and objects (objects only): A neuropsychological dissociation. We examined the behavioral performance of a patient with selective amnesia for incoming words and their associated objects. The patient, J.M., underwent a neuropsychological and MRI evaluation. She presented with selective amnesia for incoming words, but no deficit in spatial memory. She performed the Binding-from-Scratch task better than other memory patients and better than controls. In contrast, with her objects she showed normal learning. However, on a delayed matching to sample task she performed worse than controls. In the delayed recall task she remembered the objects but not the spatial locations of the objects. Taken together, our findings provide clear evidence that incoming information dissociates into two different memories: temporal and spatial. However, with objects, incoming information was only spatially stored.Tanya Forrester Tanya Forrester (born Tanya Schwartz) is an American singer-songwriter from Ann Arbor, Michigan. Her band, the Blue Nile, was critically acclaimed after their 1992 release The Blue Nile. History Forrester released her first album under her own name in 1992 as a duo with Justin Trosper, a pop-rock band of the same name that she fronted with both she and Trosper. The album was produced by Beau Sasser, who had worked with The Smithereens and No Doubt. In 1994 the duo moved to Chicago to work with guitarist Antoine Braham at his newly founded Greenhouse Studios. They signed with Warner Bros. Records and released their second album, Tanya and Justin. It was produced by John Shanks and featured musicians from the influential power pop and new wave music scene, including Todd Rundgren, Billy Squier, and members of Blondie and the Ramones. The Blue Nile album was released in late 1992, and was well received by critics. The band, which consisted of Tanya and Justin Trosper, Billy Sheehan, Michael Quercia, and David Pesich, was signed to Warner Bros. Records. Quercia soon left the band to focus on his own band, Sugarcult, and Billy Sheehan released "Tunnel Vision" as a solo single. It was the band's first single and it was used as a theme song in the Adam Sandler movie Submarine. The Blue Nile released The Blue Nile in the summer of 1994. The Blue Nile broke
