Version CS6 is available for Mac and Windows, and is available in both 32- and 64-bit versions. It includes all of the necessary tools for a professional designer, including layers, image-editing tools, selections, retouching and editing tools, RGB and grayscale editing, and color-mapping tools. In addition to the new features that make the software easier to use than previous versions, version CS6 includes new content, new effects and new tools for working with layers, including the ability to manipulate layer transparency. In addition, Photoshop CS6 adds Adobe's ability to work with camera RAW (CRW) files, which enables better rendering of images from digital cameras. Because of the complexity of the program and its many features, anyone new to Photoshop will need a solid guide to the various editing functions in the program. Photoshop for Dummies is a good starting point for anyone who doesn't have specific design, photo or technical experience. In this book, participants get "dummy-proof" introductions to more than 60 topics, which include the very basics of working in the program; file formats; layers, selections, and retouching; and color. It also includes a wide variety of tutorials on how to create layers, modify selections, and correct color and exposure flaws. 1. Field of the Invention The invention pertains generally to harvesting machines and more particularly to a separator for separating a crop from the harvesting machine. 2. Description of Related Art A variety of harvesting machines are known to harvest crops from a field. One example of such a harvesting machine is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,706,887 to Overmyer et al. The harvesting machine of Overmyer has a crop gathering head where the incoming crop is gathered and held. A threshing section follows the crop gathering section and includes a number of rotatable bars where the crop, that has been gathered from the ground by the gathering section, is moved about by the bars and delivered to a separator. The separator generally includes a rotor with paddles or toothed blades that separate the crop into a grain component and a straw component. The straw component is gathered by a channel and moved to the gathering section of the harvesting machine. The size and number of rotatable bars varies according to the crop to be harvested. Different crops require the use of different sized bars to separate them into the grain component and the straw component. However, adapting the harvesting machine to harvest different crops has previously required a mechanism to increase or decrease the number of bars as needed to harvest each particular crop. Often the structure for the mechanism to adapt the crop processing, which is housed in a removable housing or drawer, is relatively complex, difficult to access and adjust. Furthermore, the harvesting machine itself, which generally includes the housing or drawer, may be relatively heavy and may weigh significantly more than other portions of the harvesting machine. U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,772,533 and 5,934,368 to Cherepka et al. disclose a harvesting machine having a threshing section that includes at least two rotatable shafts, each of which is provided with radial knives. The knives rotate about the shaft and have a generally C-shape cross section. A cage, which is formed of steel and is partially covered by plastic material, is provided to prevent incoming crop material from escaping from the cage. At least one of the shafts is rotatably driven by a drive unit that is included in the harvesting machine. The harvesting machine further includes a pressing unit that engages the threshing section and a crop receptacle. The pressing unit presses the crop against the threshing section and the knives from a side of the shaft. The crop is pushed through the knives and is

Q: Parallelizing the findBBox function in OpenCV? I am working on a project where I have to find the coordinates and boundaries of a path. I have used the findContours function for this purpose. However, I have a requirement where I have to find the coordinates of the paths in each pixel. I have created a data structure called Pixels and it has two integers x,y, and a linked list. In each Pixels, I store the coordinates and the path to the left and to the right of the pixel, in one of the links. I have written a function: Point findBBox(std::vector contours, Pixels bPixels[]) { Point bbox[4]; for(int i = 0; i
