In addition .Q: Rails: Deploying to Heroku With a JS API I have a JS API written in Node and would like to deploy to Heroku. The basic assumption is the API will be used with a Rails backend (e.g. ActiveJob) where backend will make API requests to the JS API. Currently the project is very simple and just houses some "pretty" front-end (HTML/CSS/SASS) and a simple API/Express backend with Node.js/Knex. I have checked out many different Heroku tutorials, but they all seem to suggest the MEAN stack (i.e. MEAN=Node, Express, Angular and MongoDB, etc.). My question is, how do I build the Node API and make sure it "just works" with a Rails Back-end in Heroku. I can use things like coffeescript to help with some of the Node APIs, but when dealing with OO Javascript, best practice seems to be using JS modules. If I build the API with JS modules, what advantage does using a MEAN stack give me, other than having a MEAN API on Github? A: Just hosting a node server in production won't make it work with Heroku. You'll need to take a look at Heroku Connect as well. Heroku Connect is a very powerful tool which makes your Heroku deployment process much simpler. Your Node and Express API becomes a Heroku back end API with a single URL endpoint. In addition, you get some URL routing features like using versioning and custom domains. You can use the Connect Generator to create a Connect API quickly. Check out the Heroku Connect page for more details. If you do decide to use the Connect API, you'll need to disable the Heroku URL routing feature in your Node server as well. Otherwise, you'll be hardcoding the URL to the API's endpoint in your Node server. If you do decide to use the Connect API, you'll want to update your question
