The Basics of Photoshop Photoshop is the gold standard of image-editing programs. It is easy to use, and in a graphical environment, things like color changes and filter effects are easy to adjust. Almost all digital cameras take a raw (unprocessed) format, so the first step is to convert a photo from that format to a format that Photoshop can work with. The next step is to do any color corrections, edits, or enhancements. Editing an image in Photoshop includes a variety of options, such as rotating, moving, scaling, trimming, cropping, and repairing image flaws. Photoshop uses a standard-based system so that any photo can be manipulated in the same way. For example, the eye can be widened with Photoshop, even though the eye was enlarged in the camera when the picture was taken. With Photoshop, you can take the border off a picture and then place a frame around the image, even though the borders and frame weren't present when the picture was taken.

Feminist robots may one day make life better for men and women - mmhsieh ====== entropy_merge Why is it that we always believe that we can fix this problem by either removing men from the equation or having robots make all the decisions? One of the biggest problems in the workplace right now is that men have a major advantage over women in the workforce because of the unconscious bias that men are more rational, more logical, and therefore more effective at assigning and evaluating and rewarding work. We don't need Feminist robots because we need to teach all genders to be more emotional, to be more aware of their unconscious biases, and to be more open- minded about the possibilities and abilities that each gender presents, both positive and negative. If we just make men less of an advantage and take away every opportunity for them to fall back on their rational tendencies, maybe men will have no more advantage in workplaces. Men would still be men and women would still be women, but I think that's not such a bad thing. ~~~ Hasknewbie >Why is it that we always believe that we can fix this problem by either removing men from the equation or having robots make all the decisions? To me it seems that this is just the other way to put the issue into a tautology: women are in the workforce because men are in the workforce, the whole gender identity question is just a reflection of the fact that in a class-based society one class (women) is empowered while the other (men) is not. >We don't need Feminist robots because we need to teach all genders to be more emotional, to be more aware of their unconscious biases, and to be more open- minded about the possibilities and abilities that each gender presents, both positive and negative. That may very well be the case, and in that case feminism fails pretty badly as a solution to that problem. >Men would still be men and women would still be women, but I think that's not such a bad thing. How is that better than having feminism fails as the solution? Are

In a wireless environment, terminals are assigned to various cells and are handled according to the characteristic of the cells. In order to reduce a time delay due to this processing of the terminal, one base station temporarily assigns a frequency to the terminal, starts the terminal, and then changes the frequency to the frequency assigned to the terminal after the processing of the terminal has been completed. By doing so, the base station can shorten a time from a time when the terminal requests assignment of the frequency to a time when the terminal actually receives the assigned frequency. A method for controlling an operation of a terminal device in a wireless environment is disclosed in Patent Document 1. In the method, a virtual base station assigns a frequency using a prescribed threshold in a wireless environment, and the terminal device starts executing a prescribed program when the assigned frequency is changed.Q: Is there a way to find a minimum feature set for optimal separation for a given class in K-nearest neighbors? I want to use the K-NN algorithm for linear separability. But I am not sure on how to choose a desired minimum of classes for a given dataset. For example, if I choose the class not to be separated, I cannot draw a line that separates all points in the datapoints (the KNN algorithm works only for a binary class). If the answer is not linear separability in some cases, is it true that it is always linear separable? A: KNN works by finding the datapoints that are closest to the point under consideration. If you can find a hyperplane that separates all the data points of each class, then you get exactly what you want in the case where all the points have different labels. This means that you should choose the dimension of the hypersurface that is smallest. Q: Is there an equivalent for the "leave" command on a Windows Server? I've been trying to remove a user from a specific group using Task Manager, but it doesn't seem to work. A: The "leave" command actually opens a menu asking "What do you want to do?" for the user, with the options of "Leave Group", "Leave Group/Leave Computer", "Leave Group/Leave Computer and Log Off/Turn Off" and "Leave Group/Leave Computer and Shut Down". If you want to leave a group and continue working, pressing "Leave Group/Leave Computer and Log Off/Turn Off" works
